direct interest in the exact form which the Mayor, at the head of a monster the consequent political and territorial redistribution would ultimately take. There were other powers whose special relations to the scene of the conflict were such that they could not but be expected to claim a voice when the time of permanent settlement came on some points which were full of difficulty.

Orangers Ready to Sail.

So long as the belligerency con-tinued, said the Prime Minister, Great Britain would deprecate the raising or pressing of any isolated questions which, if they were handled separately and at once, might likely lead to trrec-oncilable divergences, but which might assume a different and perhaps a more tractable aspect if they were reserved to be handled from the wider view-point of a general settlement.

It was at this moment, said the Prime Minister, the first and greatest of European interests to dreumscribe the scope of the present campaign. For that object the powers had labored as one and had done so so far suc-cessfully, and it was their hope and belief that they would continue to labor in that manner to the end. It was gratifying to the government to know that, however much it was divided dn domestic controversies, it had in these large matters the sympathy and support of the whole community and could speak in the councils of Europe with the authority of a united people.
